

Last year, Russian athletes were given a blanket ban from this summer's Rio Olympic Games, after the World Anti-Doping Agency (WADA) published a damning report on Russian sport – claiming that: “Russia operated a state-sponsored doping programme for four years”. However, this ruling was controversially overturned in July by the International Olympic Committee (IOC) leaving Russian athletes free to compete unless their sporting federations said that they couldn't. The summer proved a turbulent time for the debate over doping in sport with more athletes found guilty of using performance enhancing drugs at the games themselves.

To debate these issues, and showcase the Debating Matters Competition. sixth form students from Hutton Church of England Grammar School, Preston, and Loreto College, Manchester, will be pushed to think beyond the headlines by an esteemed panel of adult judges with content ruling over style to decide the winner.
